L.B. Landry High School

L.B. Landry School was first dedicated on October 26, 1938. The school was named in honor of physician, activist and accomplished soloist, Lord Beaconsfield Landry. L.B. Landry was born and received his early education in Donaldsonville, Louisiana. A renaissance man, Landry would attend Fisk University where he became a member of the legendary Fisk Jubilee Singers. From there he would go on to attend Meharry Medical School, earning his medical degree in 1908. After medical school, Landry settled in Algiers, where he practiced medicine and served the community for more than 30 years. L.B. Landry died in January of 1934.

L.B. Landry originally opened as an elementary school. Its first principal was Israel M. Augustine, Sr. Located on New Orleans' west bank, in the Whitney section of Algiers, L.B. Landry wouldn't gain status as a full-fledged high school until 1942. And in 1952, L.B. Landry became the system's first combination junior/senior high school. Destroyed by fire in 1958, Landry's main building would be rebuilt just a year later. In 1969 Landry would add an annex that featured 22 classrooms, an assembly hall and a theater. Landry would continue to serve the community until Hurricane Katrina in 2005. Deteriorating conditions and damage from Hurricane Katrina left the school unoccupied after the storm. It was chosen for rebuilding as a "Quick Start" thanks to the efforts of the Landry community.

Now, almost three years later, a newly constructed, state of the art L.B. Landry High School prepares to open. The school is located at 1200 L.B. Landry Drive, and sits on four acres of land. Costing nearly $54 million, Landry is horseshoe shaped, and the new, 214,000 square foot facility was designed to meet 21st century standards for school buildings. L.B. Landry is a (green school), complete with solar panels lining the roof. Landry is designed and built to withstand winds up to 130 miles per hour.

The new school generally inspires awe in those who see it for the first time. The auditorium/performing arts theater is so impressive that, almost to the person, it produces what developers and workers have affectionately termed the "wow" factor—wow being the first word a visitor says when they see it the first time. The new L.B. Landry houses media and vo-tech centers, six science labs, a full cafeteria and kitchen, an on-site student health clinic and two full gymnasiums—one for practice and the other for competition. Landry will accept its first students in grades 7-10 at the start of the 2010-2011 school year.
